Northumbria students eye up the medals at Rio's Paralympic Games

Four Northumbria University students are going for gold at Rio's Paralympic Games this month. The quartet of swimmers have their eyes on the big prize after jetting out to the 2016 Games in South America.

Leadership and Management students Harriet Lee and Claire Cashmore will join Andrew Mullen – who begins the same course at Northumbria in September – as part of Team GB in Rio.

Meanwhile, Sport Management student, Taka Suzuki, will be representing his home country of Japan in the pool.

Taka, who is the 2008 Paralympic gold medallist and former World Champion said: “It was inspiring to watch so many world class swimmers perform so well in Rio last month.

I’m getting very excited now. It feels as if I’ve been waiting for this for the last four years and now I’m finally ready to go.

“I had a practice run in July and I’ve just completed a training camp with the Japanese squad in Canada. I’m very confident; as confident as I can be. It was a very successful camp and the squad will arrive in Rio in the right shape and, more importantly, in the same time zone.”

The swimming begins on Thursday September 8th and will be running on eight of the 10 Paralympic competition days.

Claire is combining a Leadership and Management masters degree at Northumbria with a 12th season of international swimming. Speaking before she jetted off, she said: “For me it’s about going to Rio, following a process and being the best that I can possibly be. In the past I’ve become fixated on winning the gold but you can’t determine the medal before you get there. As I’ve become older and more experienced I’ve realised it just doesn’t make sense to put that kind of pressure on yourself. If I can race the best race that I could then I have to be happy with that. Being the best that I can be is my mantra now.”

Claire has been competing for Great Britain for 12 years and has been building in excitement for the Games over the last month. “As soon as the Rio Olympics started and I was watching all of the action from the pool it hit home: this is real,” she said. “I found myself getting emotionally involved from the first minute and I lived, ate and breathed the Olympics for two weeks. I just love it. It’s so exciting to think I’ll be competing in a few days.”

The BA \(Hons\) Leadership and Management course is an innovative work-related degree programme that is designed to fit alongside an athlete’s existing sports career. It gives credit for prior sports training while preparing students for a career in leadership or management.

The course makes the most of a sportsperson’s wealth of management skills and competencies. Having supported many sports professionals in the past, the University appreciates the need for complete learning flexibility. As such whilst completing the course students will receive ongoing individual guidance from tutors across Newcastle Business School, alongside full access to the range of on site and distance learning resources available.

Claire was persuaded to go for gold in Rio by Northumbria University’s Head of Swimming, Louise Graham, and has since encouraged fellow swimmers to check out the University’s academic and sporting package.

“I worked with Louise in 2012 and it’s been great to work with her at Northumbria,” she added. “The support I get from the University as a swimmer and a student is invaluable. There aren’t many universities out there that can offer the same level of dual support.”

Louise said: “Our Paralympic swimmers at this year’s Games all competed at London 2012, and over the last four years they have worked incredibly hard to improve on their results and make it to the top of the podium. They are true professionals and each and every one of them has all the key attributes needed to realise their dreams in Rio. I have no doubts that they will rise to the occasion and deliver their best ever performances over the coming weeks.”

It was Claire and Harriet who persuaded new-starter Andrew to join Northumbria, and the Manchester-based student will begin the Leadership and Management degree, which he will study by distance-learning, when he returns from Rio.

Andrew explained: “I had been discussing university options with some of the other GB swimmers and both Harriet and Claire suggested I get in touch with Louise and look at Northumbria. They both had nothing but good things to say about the academic support and standard of the swimming programme so it was a no-brainer in the end.

“I have specific targets in mind for Rio – the main thing for me is to deliver some lifetime bests under the greatest pressure. The medals will take care of themselves. I can only do my best. As for the competition, it’s difficult to know who will turn up on the day. There will be swimmers from further afield who I’ve never competed against as well as a few familiar faces. Somebody could spring a surprise.”
